

Technology

When I grow up, I think I would become a technologist before anything else. I'm the fastest typer in my grade, and all of my time at home is spent on the computer. I have most of my friends online. I know basic html, and how to use various programs such as paint shop pro, paint, web editor, power point, animation center, and so on.

I first believe I could make all the money I need becoming a technologist. I'm already dedicated to technology of all sorts. I've been teaching myself for four years now. I've never taken the classes or needed the books on it, except for html, that I learned in 6/7, in 6th grade.

Secondly, I think it would be all that I would be willing to do. My life is already spent mostly on the computer. I don't have all that much motive to get out and do anything else. I don't go outside unless its to get in the car to go somewhere, I don't play sports, or even go shopping, I can do that online as well.

Last, I think I would make a really good technologist because tech is what I'm good at. Everyone is good at something, well mine is technology, my parents and friends come to me when they need help, and I usually have it fixed within a matter of minutes. It would be easy for me to improve any of my skills to become a better technologist, because tech. is one of the few things that interest me.

When I grow up, if I go for anything, it's going to be a technologist. I could live my dream, sitting at the computer all day and learn, or get my work done. I could finish quickly, make money fast to pay for all my online needs, and just be happy with my life. ☺
