

The Internet

I love the Internet, because it is a fantastic way to be connected to the world. Sometimes I use the Internet to help with my math homework. First, I bring up the Internet Explorer and type www.math.com in the address bar, and it takes me to a math learning web site. This web site shows how to do all kinds of math including geometry and algebra. Then, you can even take a small test on the section of math to see what you need to work on most.

The Internet is also wonderful for researching all sorts of things. For instance, once I used the Internet to do a paper on volcanoes. I had plenty of information and pictures at my finger tips. It helped me get an A on my paper.

However, my favorite use for the Internet is games. There are so many terrific games on www.yahoo.com, www.barbie.com, and www.cartoonnetwork.com. Some of the games are learning games that help children learn a variety of skills like Mathematics and English. I really enjoy playing the many different games I find on the Internet.

Like me, some people live in a small town, and the most news they get is from Television only aired at a certain time. With the power of the Internet people can get information about anything at any time of the day. No one has to wait for the six O'clock news. Over all, I feel that the Internet is a special tool to help advance people's skills in learning about new, old or just exciting things.
